It had been two months since the dead had risen and the world had descended into chaos. The survivors had banded together in small groups, struggling to find food, water, and shelter. But as the days turned into weeks, hope began to dwindle.

In the small town of Idaho Falls, a group of survivors had taken refuge in an abandoned grocery store. They had managed to scavenge enough food and supplies to last them for a few weeks, but they knew that they couldn't stay there forever. They needed to find a more permanent solution.

One day, a group of survivors from a nearby town arrived at the grocery store. They had heard rumors that there was a group of survivors in Idaho Falls, and they had come to join them. The survivors in Idaho Falls welcomed the newcomers, and they all agreed to work together to find a way to survive.

The survivors knew that they couldn't stay in the grocery store forever. They needed to find a more permanent solution. They decided to leave the grocery store and search for a new home. They packed up their belongings and set out into the unknown.

The survivors traveled for days, scavenging for food and supplies. They avoided the cities, knowing that they would be overrun with the dead. They traveled through the countryside, hoping to find a place where they could settle down and start over.

One day, the survivors came to a small town. The town was deserted, but it looked like it had been abandoned in a hurry. The survivors decided to investigate.

The survivors cautiously entered the town. They found that the town was empty. There were no signs of life, except for the dead. The dead were everywhere. They were in the streets, in the houses, and in the stores.

The survivors were horrified. They had never seen so many dead in one place. They knew that they had to get out of the town as quickly as possible.

The survivors turned and ran. They ran back to their vehicles and drove away as fast as they could. They didn't stop until they were far away from the town.

The survivors were shaken by what they had seen. They knew that they couldn't stay in the countryside forever. They needed to find a more permanent solution.

The survivors decided to head to the coast. They hoped to find a boat that they could use to escape to another country. They traveled for weeks, following the coastline. They hoped to find a boat that they could use to escape.

The survivors searched the coast for a boat. They finally found a small boat that they could use. They loaded their belongings into the boat and set sail.

The survivors sailed for days. They finally reached another country. They were safe.

The survivors had survived the zombie apocalypse. They had found a new home. They were safe.
