The first encyclopedia was compiled by Pliny the Elder in the 1st century AD. His work, the Natural History, contained information on a wide range of topics, including astronomy, geography, zoology, and botany. Over the centuries, many other encyclopedias have been published, each reflecting the state of knowledge at the time.

In the 18th century, the Encyclopedia Britannica was first published. The Britannica is one of the most famous and respected encyclopedias in the world. It is known for its comprehensive coverage of all fields of knowledge and its high-quality articles.

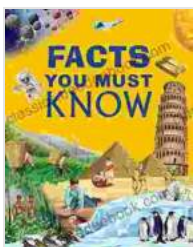

In the 20th century, the development of digital technology led to the creation of online encyclopedias. These encyclopedias are often more up-to-date than print encyclopedias, and they can be accessed from anywhere with an internet connection. Wikipedia is one of the most popular online encyclopedias. It is a free, open-source encyclopedia that is written and edited by volunteers from all over the world.

Encyclopedias are a valuable resource for students, researchers, and anyone who wants to learn more about the world around them. They provide a comprehensive and authoritative overview of all branches of knowledge.

Here are some interesting facts about encyclopedias:

- The largest encyclopedia ever published is the Yongle Encyclopedia, which was compiled in the 15th century in China. It contains over 11,000 volumes and covers a wide range of topics, including history, geography, science, and literature.
- The first encyclopedia to be published in the United States was the Encyclopedia Americana, which was first published in 1829. It is still published today and is one of the most popular encyclopedias in the world.
- The Encyclopedia Britannica is the oldest continuously published encyclopedia in the world. It was first published in 1768 and is still published today.
- Wikipedia is the largest encyclopedia in the world, with over 55 million articles in over 300 languages.

- Encyclopedias are a valuable resource for students, researchers, and anyone who wants to learn more about the world around them. They provide a comprehensive and authoritative overview of all branches of knowledge.
